Uluru Statement from the Heart

What is it and why it matters

Indigenous legal expert available

The Uluru Statement from the Heart is an invitation to the Australian people from First Nations Australians. It asks Australians to walk together to build a better future. In Anthony Albanese's victory speech as Australia's 31st Prime Minister, he vowed that Labor will commit 'in full' to the Uluru Statement and that he will hold a referendum during his first term.

But what does this commitment really mean?

Teela Reid is available to answer this and many other questions. Interviews available.

As a proud Wiradjuri and Wailwan woman, lawyer and the University of Sydney's inaugural First Nations Lawyer-in-Residence, Teela Reid examines the hard questions that cut to the legitimacy of our democracy. Why are we a nation that has not yet recognised the First People, and what can we do to take action?

Ahead of National Reconciliation Week and on the eve of the fifth anniversary of the Uluru Statement from the Heart, Teela Reid will discuss truth and reckoning in conversation with University of Sydney alumna Billi FitzSimons, Editor of The Daily Aus on Wednesday 25 May from 6pm-7pm (in-person and live streamed).
